Bike Performance Review The most powerful car I have driven in a very long time. The rapid acceleration at low speeds and the instant response when you hit the gas were totally impressive. Suspension was set up for sporty driving so it was not at all difficult to achieve aggressive cornering. Handling was precise and direct with very little body roll. So far so good, now I'll add a little more detail. This is a comfortable, quiet car which is more than fine as long as the roads aren't wet. It doesn't really want to work on mountain roads or in the mud but they have thickened up in recent years and most of the roads around here are now traffic free. (The only road that really needs to be avoided is the main A-road going to junction 3. Most of the other roads can be negotiated safely but a little more caution is advisable). I did a few outings in the car last year on different circuits and the seatbelt could have been a little tighter. Having said that, I was able to be perfectly comfortable. The driving position is good for me and the sunroof would be appreciated in hot weather. In terms of road noise, the car is well insulated and I didn't really notice any road noise, which was good because it means I can listen to music comfortably. The car is designed for the winter months so the rear windscreen is raised in order to protect it. It's a handy feature and not many cars have it nowadays.
